

Volunteer opportunities for families

What: Many of the organizations that your family deals with on a regular basis are tax-exempt: arts organizations, churches, youth groups, museums, schools (public and private), sports organizations, theater groups... A little investigation into tax exempt status and documentation of expenses could yield a charitable contribution deduction. Check out the tax exempt status of your organization in IRS Publication 78 and start keeping records.

Cash contributions: Contributions of cash are deductible if documented with a receipt or a cancelled check. Cash contributions of $250 or more require documentation from the charity. Don't overlook the following items as cash contributions:

- Payments you make in lieu of participating in a fundraiser
- Supplies purchased and donated to a nonprofit school (even if your child benefits)
- Tickets to charity events (if more than fair market value was paid) are deductible to the extent the price exceeds the fair market value unless there is an established charge for the ticket.
- Tickets to charity events returned to the organization without receiving a refund
- Memberships to zoos and museums where the annual payment is $75 or less
- Zoos and museums having memberships costing more than $75 per year should give you a receipt showing the tax deductible amount.
- Out of pocket volunteer costs should be well documented and acknowledged.
- PTA dues

Noncash contributions: Noncash contributions are generally deducted at fair market value. If the value of the donation is under $250, a receipt from the organization showing date and description of the property is required unless it is impractical to get a receipt. If the value is over $250, a receipt is always required from the organization.

- Food donated is at fair market value, which might exceed the cost. Don't forget to document your donations to fundraisers, classrooms, game treats, and church events.
- Used clothing items donated to fundraisers are valued at fair market value, which is usually far less than the cost.

Mileage: Don't forget to keep track of mileage to team meetings and practices, board meetings, shopping for supplies, delivering items, working in the classroom, PTA meetings, working as a chaperone, or teaching Sunday school...

Travel: Travel expenses while performing services for a charitable organization are deductible if there is no significant element of pleasure, recreation, or vacation involved.

- A chaperone can deduct travel expenses for the times on duty.
- A chosen representative attending a convention can deduct reasonable unreimbursed travel expenses.

Not deductible:

- Registration fees to participate, tuition, or enrollment fees
- Home school supplies for your own child
- Scrip (coupons purchased at a discount by the charity and sold at fair market value)
- Items purchased at fundraisers such as raffle tickets and Girl Scout cookies.
- The value of your time is never deductible.
